ON THE IMPROVEMENT OF

S H I P - B U I L D I N G, &c.

OUR design in the publication of the LETTERS we have already printed, and propose in future to print, on this subject, being totally new in this country, has brought many people and opinions together, which latter must be consequently of a various or mixed nature. The enquiries made at our PUBLISHER'S have been such as he (not being of the profession) cannot be expected to answer; it will therefore be necessary to inform the PUBLIC of our plan, as well as of our reasons for pursuing it in this manner, viz.

It is intended, in order to induce ingenious men to assist, by mathematical and philosophical researches, the practical Builder,

1. To collect the opinions of the THEORIST, as well as of the PRACTICAL ARTIST, and place them in such a point of view as may afford ground to proceed on in these enquiries.

2. To collect the information of Admirals, Captains, &c. of the Navy, who have seen these machines in actual service, and consequently are able to speak on the respective merits and demerits much more ably than the Constructor.

3. To accumulate PLANS and MODELS, as well as ACTUAL EXPERIMENTS, from which reasoning and conclusions may be drawn to render this abstruse subject more easy of investigation.

4. We publish these LETTERS on the blue Cover of our MAGAZINE, as the most certain way of their being taken notice of without abridging our other Readers of their usual quantity of amusement, and as procuring to them a greater circulation than could be effected in any other manner.—We are conscious that there does not at present exist any work which can be called a SCIENTIFIC TREATISE on the subject of SHIP-BUILDING in our language; but this method method of collecting single Essays may as reasonably be expected to bring forward materials wherewith to form one, as the HOUGHTON COLLECTION (published in a similar manner in 1696) has produced many excellent Treatises on Agriculture, and consequently the improvements now so visible in England.

5. The PLANS and MODELS are likewise designed to form the materials of a PUBLIC LECTURE* on the subject, as one of the means in which the young may find improvement and the aged amusement, and may be viewed as they are accumulated.

6. The ultimatum of our PLAN is, to form a SOCIETY, with able Masters to instruct, and PREMIUMS or HONORARY REWARDS for NEW DISCOVERIES.

* Already in some forwardness.

NUMBER III.*

IN continuation of that division of our plan which is to treat of the Form and Size of Ships, we must here take notice, that an experienced LIEUTENANT of the ROYAL NAVY, tho' he perfectly agrees with our Correspondent, whose letter closed the last Number of our Original Papers in other respects, differs from him with regard to Ships of War of 50 guns: These he wishes to retain in the service, not as line-of-battle ships, tho' upon certain emergencies they might, and ought to be introduced into a fleet in that capacity, but as powerful single ships, excellently well adapted to convoy fleets of merchantmen, in which service ships of that rate distinguished themselves in the last war: As there are at present but few of them, in proportion to the other rates, it may be sufficient to produce one instance.—The RENOWN, of 50 guns, a prime sailer, the Commander of which more than once received the thanks of our merchants for his services in protecting the commerce of his country home and outward-bound. Both of our Correspondents therefore concurring in one point, that the number of Classes in the Navy might be reduced, it remains to be determined by Officers who have been long in the service, and have experimentally found the advantages of employing 50 gun ships as convoys, and by impartial Masters of trading vessels, whether the proposed alteration marked No. II. in our last, which makes five Rates or Classes, by retaining 50 gun ships, or that marked No. I. reducing them to four, according to our Correspondent's letter, merits the preference; and any further information will be thankfully received, and communicated to the Public in some future paper.

* For Numbers I. and II. see two Pages farther on.

Let us now, according to promise, investigate the Construction of Ships of 44 guns.

The contracting of ships on their upper decks is certainly a very erroneous practice, as by this mode of construction, every wave, when such a ship goes on a side-wind (which may be the case nine days out of ten) is conducted in a greater or lesser degree upon the upper deck, thereby keeping the people continually wet. Nor is this the only consequence: It is on this deck that all the material business is done, and therefore more room should be given for working; and the shrouds leading to the dead eyes would in that case have a greater base than they have at present, and would be much stronger; neither could a ship be overfet with double the wind or sea.

The smaller class of 70 gun ships, 64, 50, 44, are all of them built according to the present establishment without contracted upper decks, cannot open their lower deck ports, even in moderate weather. They are all too small, and have not sufficient bearings; so that from these causes, and the ports upon their lower decks, though large, being only 4 feet 6 inches above the surface of the water, it is very unsafe at any time, and absolutely impossible to open them at all in a moderate breeze; and thus they are by no means a match for a French ship of 36 guns in an engagement. yet it is easily practicable to have them 6 feet out of the water, then they might be opened against the enemy with the greatest safety a most times.

The CONQUEROR and the CORNWALL, old 74 gun ships, had sufficient bearings, and consequently were better sea-boats, and could open their lower deck ports almost in any weather.

Another cause of disasters to men of war is, the wrong construction of a Pipe which it has been judged necessary to introduce into them, in order to throw in a proper quantity of water, to mix with the bilge water, and which is pumped out again, to cleanse the ship, and free her from foul and noxious air. This Pipe, at present, is so badly contrived, that the working of the ship soon breaks it, and it is well known that the ROYAL GEORGE was obliged to have a new one after every cruize, which at last proved the cause of her dreadful catastrophe. By the assistance of skilful workmen, we hope to be enabled hereafter to present a new form of a pipe, to prevent the danger ships are exposed to from the breaking of these machines on the present construction; and not being as yet in possession of one which in every respect meets with the approbation of the gentlemen concerned in our patriotic institution, we must still solicit the favour of communications upon the subject from ingenious men.

An improvement in the Operation of the RUNDER has been suggested, sketches of which, with proper explanations, are preparing for our next Number. In the mean time, we wish to shew an ardent desire to oblige all our Correspondents, by as early an insertion of their letters as the nature of our extensive plan will admit, due regard being paid to the arrangement of them, as they coincide with that division of our subject we may have under immediate consideration.
